HOW TO COLONIZE MOKU PAPAPA!

It would appear either that Oahu jail is too small to hold all those committed to it by the Law Courts of this kingdom, or that the Government is too poor to support them. This is inferred from the fact—and fact we are told it is—that about 50 of the prisoners, with unexpired sentences, were set free, two or three weeks ago. It is hard to suppose that these could have been so large a proportion of the whole, of that special character which justifies cutting short the judges' sentences. Therefore the inference is a reasonable one, and on the assumption that it is correct, we come volubly to the assistance of the authorities with a valuable suggestion! Make Ocean Island or Moku Papapa—discovered by the Board of Geography and annexed by the Colonel—a penal settlement. Just look at the rich and thriving colonies of New South Wales and Van Dieman's Land! They were founded in this way. Induce the British Government to charter a steamer to go down in search of somebody that may have been left locked in the cabin of the Donator Castle, surreptitiously stow away the prisoners in the hold, and smuggle aboard some timber-headed politician with a garrulous tongue as Governor. This is how to avoid the expense of transportation. Once there, the colony will be self-supporting. Work without wages, and the Colonist's coconuts for food. In a short time they would have a wonderful city, with crooked streets, uneven side-walks, pools of mud, and mosquitoes pleasantly diversified—Honolulu junior.

TROUBLE AND DISSATISFACTION.

Man was born to growl, woman to find fault. The poor man thinks he ought to be rich, while the rich man thinks he ought to be richer. Such a thing as perfect satisfaction is unknown. In a sailor, growling is innate, and probably no one has more reason to growl than he whose lot is cast upon the waters. Housewives are never, or hardly ever satisfied, but they have multifarious reasons to find fault, of which their husbands know naught. Added to the vicissitudes of life, there is the inevitable baby to contend with. The man about town certainly has his troubles also, but he who grows the most, and with the least cause, is the young man known as the "dude." He is everlastingly blessing (?) his tailor. His pants are either too tight or not tight enough. His coat does not fit at the back, and he is (while walking along the streets) constantly looking at his reflection in the shop windows, (when not engaged looking at his boots) to see where the defect is. He does not exactly know where to find it. He at once denounces his tailor. He has tried Tregloan, Roth, and Kerr, and condemns them all a like. He will not have another garment from them on any account. In his opinion they know nothing about the art of tailoring. Honolulu has its "dudes," but not many. They are good fellows in their own way. Always smiling, and spotlessly clean. When meeting one another they compare notes, and the unfortunate tailor gets his deserts if either one or other can discover a defect, more particularly in the tightness of the pants. They discuss the matter and agree that there is not a tailor in this town worthy of the name. The London dude swears he will have to fall back on his London tailor, Mr. Poole of Regent street. (Probably he has never seen Poole's in his life). His friend resolves to send in future to New York, to his friend Mr. ——— for his clothes. In short the dudes are prejudiced against the Honolulu tailors, and were Poole's head cutter to open on Merchant street, he would be growled at as a novice in the trade. All persons, dudes or otherwise, are to some extent prejudiced.

CONE TO SAMOA.

It is reported that one of the 49 pardoned convicts has shaken off the dust of Hawaii from his feet, scraped the mud of Honolulu streets from his boots, and departed for the realms of Samoa. So Hawaii's loss will be Samoa's gain. We can afford the loss; they may not appreciate the gain. Every country is pleased to get rid of its criminal population, and every other country is displeased to be made the "city of refuge" for the same. The law-abiding people of this kingdom do not admire wholesale setting aside of the penalties of the Law Courts; but an assurance that every pardoned convict who has not merited pardon by reformation or good behavior, will leave the country, would have a mollifying influence. The law-abiding people abroad amongst whom they may go, would naturally, from their standpoint, be differently affected. We can't help that. How the Samouans will regard the new comers is hard to forecast. As they have been already informed of Hawaii's solicitude for their welfare, and of our intention to send them a Commissioner to instruct them in the mysteries of statesmanship and the maneuvers of politics, they may mistake this strange gentleman for the promised Hawaiian Commissioner and receive him accordingly. Who knows! As the BULLETIN has two or three subscribers and a correspondent in those remote regions, we hope to ascertain in due time.

THE HULA.

Both the Advertiser and the Gazette are severe on the hula, but no more severe than the nature of the performance called by that name demands. Not one word can be said in its defence; the strongest possible language of disapprobation may be appropriately uttered against it. Let it be understood that the monotonous chanting of a song whose words may be unobjectionable—a pastime in which aged Hawaiians often find pleasure—is not what is meant. The real hula is something different from this, which everybody who has seen it performed knows, although a sight of the performance does not always convey the full meaning to one unacquainted with the language of the accompanying chant. Anyone who defends the hula, does so from ignorance or perversion. Either the defender does not realize the inherent depravity of what he defends, or his own mind is so depraved that the impurity of the hula is congenial to it. Both these kinds of persons have spoken in its behalf. There are many questions on which honest and intelligent men may differ, and liberal-minded men agree to differ. The hula is not a question of this nature. It is bad; decidedly bad; unmistakably bad. There is no element in it to palliate its badness. It is a national malady; a national curse; a national disgrace. It has become a by-word associated with the name of Hawaii in foreign lands. And as long as it exists as a national institution, under the fostering care of distinguished patronage, it will secure to the nation the contempt and ridicule of the outside world. When the practices of the heiau were abolished, the hula should have been deemed along with them. The latter has survived the former, but it must ultimately go, too. Reason, religion, morality, and decency demand its extirpation.

THANKS.

We owe our subscribers an apology for the lateness of yesterday's issue, and we also owe a debt of thanks to our friends, the proprietors of the Gazette. Yesterday, after rolling off a few hundred copies of the DAILY BULLETIN the printing machine got out of gear. It was of a simple character but took time to rectify. We at once fell back on our friends for assistance, which was readily granted, Mr. Burrell, the foreman, affording all the assistance he could to aid the BULLETIN in an hour of distress. It was but a temporary derangement of the machinery, and being now rectified, we trust it will not occur again.

COLONIAL DEBTS.

The Canadians are not the only people in the world who are trying to do business on borrowed money. Every person engaged in mercantile life has seen some enterprising firm, which chanced to have good credit at bank, put out its paper for large sums, on the theory that it only required a large capital to make money; it has seldom happened that such calculations have turned out well. Some error in the reckoning, some unforeseen accident, some neglected factor upsets the whole theory. The policy of the British Colonies in North America and Australia has been to borrow all the money they could, to invest the money in public works and to trust to the income of the works to pay the loans, principal and interest. They have mortgaged posterity to hasten their development, and they have done this to an extent wholly unprecedented.

The following table will show the indebtedness of the principal colonies in proportion to population:—

COLONIES.	Popu- lation.	Debt.	Per cent.
Canada, say	4,000,000	$250,000,000	55.50
Victoria, say	1,000,000	100,000,000	100.00
N. S. Wales, say	1,000,000	150,000,000	150.00
N. Zealand, say	500,000	100,000,000	200.00

Of course, if all goes well, and the skies are forever bright, the railroads, telegraph and other great works of public improvement, for which these large debts were incurred, may supply income enough to pay the annual interest and to gradually extinguish them by the operation of a sinking fund. But the risk is alarming. Sir John A. Macdonald, Premier of Canada, informed Parliament recently that his estimates of the public revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30th last, had proved erroneous, the actual receipts having fallen $5,800,000 below the estimates, and that he would be forced to float a new loan to meet current expenditures. He dare not propose to increase taxation, for it amounts already to $7 per head for Dominion purposes alone. He is in the condition of a merchant, who not only cannot pay his note and has to renew it, but who has to borrow fresh money to meet the interest.

The peculiarity of the situation of the British Colonies arises from the fact that their debts were incurred not from any unavoidable necessity, but of deliberate purpose and in pursuance of a fixed policy of forced development. The national debts of Great Britain and France were incurred for the prosecution of wars which were, or at least were thought to be, unavoidable and essential to the national existence. Our great debt was also incurred to preserve our national life. But the debts of the British Colonies were incurred purely as a speculative operation, which it was reckoned would pay in the end. It is alarming to think what may be the consequence if the calculations on which the operation was based should prove erroneous, or if the expected reward from the expenditure should by any accident be delayed.—[S. F. Bulletin.]

A PREHISTORIC BRITON.

In the neighborhood of Stonehenge, England, a mound exists which antiquarians have long suspected to be a "barrow." A trench has now been cut through the center of it, laying bare, at a depth of four feet, a large slab. This stone formed the cover of a burial chamber, the sides and ends of which were composed of smaller stones set on edge. The interior was filled with black loam, surrounding the skeleton of a man who must have been six feet in height. At the right hand of the remains a sword and a spear head were found, while the bones of the left hand grasped a shield, the convex side of which is incised with characters undecipherable through age. On further examination it was found that the knee-joints of the skeleton were surrounded by osseous growths uniting the upper and lower parts of the leg into one continuous limb.

R. H. A. S.

Committees of the Royal Hawaiian Agricultural Society met on Monday and Tuesday evenings, and discussed the important subject of a suitable place for next year's show, in preference to the Society's establishment at Kapiolani Park. Mr. Dillingham was delegated to make enquiries regarding a site nearer town and it is understood he has been successful. The Horticultural show promises to surpass anything of all former efforts. This will take place in May next on the Government Nursery grounds on King street.
